

The outcomes are in cooperation

Mutually beneficial cooperation will bring great results. We attach great importance to such cooperation, which determines the quality and effectiveness of education. It is a state of the art test. A delegation from the American Councils for International Education visited our institute. American Councils has earned a reputation as one of the world's leading professionals and institutions to succeed.

More than 89,000 professionals from 89 countries have studied or improved their education at prestigious universities in the United States. Keyl Wagner's delegation also provided general information about the TIAME and negotiated further cooperation. The atmosphere of cooperation and cooperation with the leading American universities, which has been established in our institute, has attracted great interest. Gratuitously, our institute has established the American Councils as the leading organization for advocacy at Uzbek universities. The Delegation emphasized the importance of cooperation with the USIC and the US universities.
