

Memory is a bridge between ancestors and generations

Life is like running water, and there is no turning back. But the good deeds that have been done will be remembered and talked about for years to come. One of the philosophers who said remember your debts in the morning, your debtors in the evening. It contains the truth that only through goodness and kindness can the heart be sealed. It is better to focus on what you have and not on what you have. It is an echo of the country's defense, devotion, and perseverance for the defense of the homeland.

May 9 - "Day of Remembrance and Honor" is widely celebrated in our country as a national holiday. In this regard, the online dialogue, organized by the administration of the institute, was attended by professors, teachers, and students. Even though every professor and teacher was quarantined at home, it was impossible not to feel that each of them was spiritually enlightened and committed to his profession. The online program, initiated by the Institute's Vice-Rector for Youth Affairs Ruzimurod Choriyev, was moderated by Zuhridin Haydarov, Head of the Institute's Spirituality Department.

The opinions of Professor Qiyomiddin Nazarov and Associate Professor Rahimboy Jumaniyazov on the topic were especially rich in interesting facts and conclusions. The courage of the ancestors is important as an example for future generations, and the point that connects them is memory. Man is a saint and his memory is sacred.
